

patent owners must stand by while their patents are infringed abroad and the products of such infringement—for example, fruit or cut flowers—are then imported to and sold within the United States, without a single dime in royalty revenue to the patent owner. This is no small problem. Royalty losses with respect to some key horticultural plants have been estimated to reach between $50 to $100 million over the past five to ten years. This is money that rightfully should be directed to American plant patent owners—many of whom are small businesses and family farmers—and which would otherwise contribute tremendously to the U.S. economy.

Enactment of this legislation is not only good for American business and the economy, it is consistent with our international treaty obligations. The International Convention for the Protection of New Varieties of Plants (UPOV) was last revised in March 1991, and the United States signed the convention in October 1991. This convention provides protection for plant breeders by requiring member countries to accord certain plant patent rights, including specifically the right to prohibit others from selling, importing, or exporting harvested material (i.e., plant parts) derived from unauthorized asexually reproduced plants.

Mr. President, I had hoped to enact this change in the context of a comprehensive patent reform bill. I am disappointed that consideration of that bill has been blocked by a few senators with unrelated and rather non-descript objections, and that we are forced to take this measure up as a stand-alone bill. Nevertheless, I am pleased that the House has acted on this measure, and I commend the efforts of my colleague, Senator SMITH, to bring this bill to a vote in the Senate.

Mr. CRAIG. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent the amendment be agreed to, the bill be considered read a third time and passed, the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table, and any statements relating to the bill be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment (No. 3830) was agreed to.

The bill (H.R. 1197), as amended, was considered read the third time and passed.
